I join with many RV users in hoping that Forest Service planning will include recreational uses for the nation's forests and grasslands. In my younger days, when tent camping was less of an issue for my personal constitution, I took advantage of many US Forest Service campgrounds to enjoy the many wonders of nature. Currently, my camping is restricted to campgrounds that can accommodate a motorhome...which eliminates many, many Forest Service campgrounds. In fact, although my wife and I donate hundreds of volunteer hours each year to the National Park Service, the current status of most Forest Service campgrounds prevents us from volunteering for the Forest Service since the campgrounds usually cannot accommodate our 40-foot motorhome. We fully understand that balance is required in fulfilling your mission, but recreational uses should be a significant part of your future planning processes.
